

Corruption free India for a developed nation

'Corruption', it is a word which is familiar to everyone in this world. Why? Not because it's a well famous word for good deed but its opposite, i.e. because it's a word which describe the main reason behind lack of pace of development for any nation.

India is also one of those countries in which corruption resides as a social evil (in spite of the fact that it is present in every place on earth). So, corruption is basically the act of fraudulent activities done by those people in power. The people in power have a characteristic human nature of seeking for their own benefit first and then for the ones not in power or weak people but in this act of foolishness they forget the foremost meaning of humanity, i.e. to think and care for others. India has remain a developing country from several years and is not able to overcome this fact and become a developed nation just because of the corruption.

'Corruption' is an evil which may be considered as immortal as there's always a little part of it left in the society which contaminates the whole world. It is can be divided into three types, i.e. grand corruption made on big levels like the scam of 1992, petty corruption like bribery with a local police and small level of corruption like cheating a friend etc.

Disregarding their types, all of them are equally harmful to the society in many ways as the small level corruption grows at a steady state and sometimes it reaches a grand level.

The most common example of corruption is bribery and many people regard bribery as a substitute for corruption.

but it's not true as bribery is a type of fraudulent act considered as corruption. Many other examples of small level corruption can be making excuses for homework or fooling someone who is not so smart or in power. India is dealing with this problem not from a few times ago but from a way long time since our first prime minister took his oath. Many historians also believe that corruption even existed in the prehistoric era of Mohenjo-daro, Harappa and even in the Egypt. This is the proof that it's a human nature to seek for our own benefit first. But this act must be resolved in order to make a well-developed nation.

There are many ways in which corruption can be reduced and many of these ways are even being implemented by the Indian government as the replacement of ballot paper with EVM for no more corrupt voting. But the efforts of the government doesn't seem to be effective and the main reason behind this is that people are not realising how it could affect the development of nation as when corrupt human resources will serve for India then surely, they would destroy the whole infrastructure. Once, in a press conference, our former president and Bharat Ratna, Dr. APJ Abdul Kalam told the nation about the mantra for successful reduction of corruption and I purely agree with this and it's a belief that this can surely help to reduce corruption forever. He said that the only ones who can destroy corruption are the young generation and young children of the nation as they are the only ones who if try to make their corrupt parents to understand the real motive behind their own bad effect due to corruption, can make them corruption free hence resulting in negligible corruption and hence, a better and developed India with true and honest people and also better human resources.
